The avoidance of any perception that members of the group may be biased in some undisclosed fashion is important for the credibility of the decisions made by the group and for the integrity of the trial.

Potential conflict of interests (CoI) should be disclosed via the committee Chair, co-ordinating CIs or the trial manager. In many cases simple disclosure up front should be sufficient. After a CoI is disclosed, the relevant working group or committee will make a consensus decision about any action needed. This may include i) no action needed; ii) The member with the CoI to not participate in certain specified discussions or decisions; iii) The member with the CoI to leave the meeting when certain issues are discussed; or iv) The member with the CoI to no longer be part of the working group or committee.
